

A Child Reborn

By Kathleen, August 2005

Deep within a frightened child
No one knows how fearful she is.
Deep within a tear is falling;
I wish someone could see the fear that's within.

How could I know you were there with me?
You didn't leave when the fear moved in.
Now I know though I could not see you
You stayed with me even deeper within.

All through the years I struggled to hide me;
Not to let the hated child appear.
She's so bad no one could love her...
What a wicked lie for such a shy, tender heart.

You waited so patiently to show me
That child inside is not wicked...
I find, instead,
I was created with goodness in mind.

No more time for empty places;
No more time to be hidden by fear.
The world is hungry
So come out of hiding.
Show them the brilliance of God living there.
